ABSTRACT

This practicum identifies the fundamental steps to identify geographic locations of charter schools in Arizona for use with GIS and provides a spatial analysis example to demonstrate why analyzing charter school location can be significant. The first part of the practicum describes the complex process of geocoding the charter schools. This required an accurate and current address list of all Arizona charter schools, which was obtained by communicating with multiple state agencies. The charter school information available, and not available, to the public from each agency has to be clarified in a time consuming process. If current database practices for charter schools within Arizona go unchanged, the table of necessary identifiers created in this study will be available to assist future researchers who may require it.

The second part of the practicum presents an example of how this dataset might be used. After geocoding all of the Arizona on-site charter schools (also referred to as brick-and-mortar schools), the spatial relationships between the charter schools and their location within rural school districts were analyzed. Each traditional school district was analyzed and ranked by the percentage of rural land (National Center for Education Statistics classifications) within its attendance borders. Attendances of all charter schools were paired against the rural locales through spatial analysis. Because the results of the paired analysis suggested possible effects to school districts in the same locations, percentage changes to traditional school districts were analyzed separately. Thirty of the most rural school districts were compared to thirty of the least rural school districts to better understand changes to enrollment and reliance on state funding. Unfortunately, the current state policy of aggregating financial data to charter holders, rather than individual charter schools, prevents the spatial analysis of charter school funding.

CHAPTER 1: Introduction

Following a historical tie-breaking vote by Vice President Mike Pence on a cabinet nomination, Betsy DeVos was sworn into office as the United States Secretary of Education on February 7, 2017 (Huetteman & Alcindor, 2017). Her past experiences included lobbyist efforts “focused on expanding parental choice in education and on embracing charter schools and vouchers” (Zernike & Alcindor, 2017). Her work in charter school and voucher expansion was “applauded” (Zernike & Alcindor, 2017) by Republicans as it aligned well with the presidential campaign platform on education “which called for a $20 billion voucher initiative aimed at low-income children” (Huetteman & Alcindor, 2017). In addition to a national looming voucher initiative, Arizona also passed a voucher law, the Empowerment Scholarship Account, on April 6, 2017 which was considered “one of the most expansive school-voucher programs in the nation” (Sanchez & O’Dell, 2017)(Appendix B). As changing federal and state laws for “school choice” could leave rural areas marginalized, lawmakers from rural areas have been “particularly wary of such initiatives” (Huetteman & Alcindor, 2017). With a vast majority of Arizona’s land considered rural (National Center for Education Statistics Commissioner, 2017), research is needed to elucidate possible effects of expanding state-funded “school choice” in rural communities.

In rural areas of Maine and Vermont, state-funding has supported private education for over 140 years. However, this policy has applied to rural students without a “public school in close proximity to their home” (Cunningham, 2017). As modern day charter schools began to sprout throughout the U.S. in the 1990’s, they were “envisioned as a new form of public school that would be small, locally run, innovative, and open to all”(Cobb & Glass, 2009: 5). Charter schools were associated with “increased accountability and improved performance, as measured by student achievement” (Cobb & Glass, 2009: 5). Contradictory to this ideal, the outcome for Arizona charter schools has been a loss of local control with 99-percent of all charter school authorizing managed at a state-level by the Arizona State Board of Charter Schools in the 2016-2017 school year (Arizona Department of Education, 2017).

As local control of charter schools has decreased, an experiment of competition between charter schools and traditional school districts has been increasing throughout Arizona. This competition exists in urban communities as well as in rural communities, where “school choice” can translate into a dichotomy between choosing to attend a budget-tight school district (Figure 1) or choosing a charter school which could be receiving a greater amount of Basic State Aid (Table 1).

(Source: Arizona Legislature Joint Legislative Budget Committee Staff, 2016)

It should be noted that per pupil spending for Basic State Aid (Table 1) calculates an average per pupil total for all Arizona school districts and charter schools. This amount is computed by dividing funding totals by corresponding ADM counts which represent a statewide average. As shown in the map for spending by school district (Figure 1), total per pupil spending can vary greatly between individual school districts within the same state. According to the State of Arizona Office of the Auditor General, 2015 had a “wide range in total per pupil operational spending among Arizona districts.” (Davenport, 2016: 2) “Even when excluding Arizona’s very small districts, which have highly variable spending patterns, fiscal year 2015 total spending by district (Basic State Aid plus other revenue) ranged from $5,911 per pupil to $18,853 per pupil.” (Davenport, 2016: 2)

The relationships between funding, spending, and location can be studied among school districts because school districts have geographic boundaries. However, that is not the case for charter schools. Charter school districts (also known as charter holders) do not have boundaries, therefore, the funding and spending patterns of the districts cannot be studied spatially. Funding and spending patterns cannot be studied for individual charter schools either because this reported data is aggregated with all schools operated by a charter holder, and data is reported with the location of the charter holder’s office and not the location of individual charter schools. Even in the case where there is one charter school per charter holder, the location of the school and district office can become confused, and some charters operate as online schools.

The overall focus of this research is to gain a better understanding of spatial relationships that exist between charter schools and their locations. With a majority of the state being rural and with an increasing number of charter school students, Arizona provides a case study for possible outcomes in other rural states experiencing an increase in charter school attendance. The goals of this practicum are; (1) creating a detailed method for geocoding charter school location data and presenting an alternative locale classification method for school districts, and (2) providing a spatial analysis example that utilizes both of these methods for geocoding and classification.

1.1 Overview of the First Objective: Organize Location Data for Arizona Schools

1.1.1 Data for Geocoding Charter Schools

In order to achieve the goal of geocoding Arizona charter schools, the first step of the process was to identify how many charter schools were operational. Once this number was found, it was then necessary to categorize each charter school according to whether it was attended in-person, or if it was attended online (these would not to be mapped to a location). Separate tables were made for the in-person and online charter schools. Among other attributes, the following attributes were included in the table for each in-person charter school; the state codes, the school codes, and the address for the school. Charter school addresses allowed for school locations to be geocoded and charter school state codes allowed for data to be added later. The data to be added later could include table data from the Arizona Department of Education's Finance database and data from the National Center of Education Statistics. Part of the goal for creating the tables and geocoding the school locations was to confirm the accuracy of the information. Equally important, was learning the structure of Arizona's charter school system, including which state agency manages what aspects of charter school data.

1.1.2 Alternative School District Location Classifications for Rural Regions

One of the goals of this research is to present an alternative approach to locale classifications for Arizona school district. The alternative would classify school districts according to the percentage of rural land within the entire district. One of the classification processes for Arizona schools is done by the National Center of Education Statistics. This division of the U.S. Department of Education classifies school districts according to the location of the students and schools within the district and does not consider that some large districts have very small areas of “suburban” and this pairs them against other school districts that could have up to 100-percent suburban area. (See Figure 4 map of Casa Grande Union High School District). The goal of an alternative classification process is to capture any major differences between large districts with large percentages of rural land and districts with a smaller percentage of rural land. The U.S. Department of Education recognizes that the locale classification currently used is not a perfect process and many rural schools can be found in school districts defined as non-rural (Appendix D).

1.2 Overview of the Second Objective: Performing a Spatial Analysis Sample

The spatial analysis goal of this research was to find patterns of charter school attendance in rural areas of Arizona. If there were any relationships between rural communities and increasing or decreasing attendance, then this research would help identify potential outcomes for rural areas. The broader goal for this spatial analysis was trying to use Arizona as a case study for other charter school states comprised of a large amount of rural land and an increasing amount of charter school attendance. As the percentages of rural land are not a consideration in the current school district classifications for statistical analysis through the National Center for Education Statistics, the goal was to propose an alternative and compare these percentages with changes in charter school enrollment.

1.3 Background: Arizona Charter School Accountability

Percentages of all public school students enrolled in public charter schools for the 2014-2015 school year are shown in Figure 2. Arizona led the states with 19-percent of all students attending charter schools (National Center for Education Statistics Commissioner, 2017). According to the U.S. Department of Education, “after the District of Columbia, Arizona had the next highest percentage of public school students enrolled in charter schools with 19-percent representing 206,670 students” (National Center for Education Statistics Commissioner, 2017).

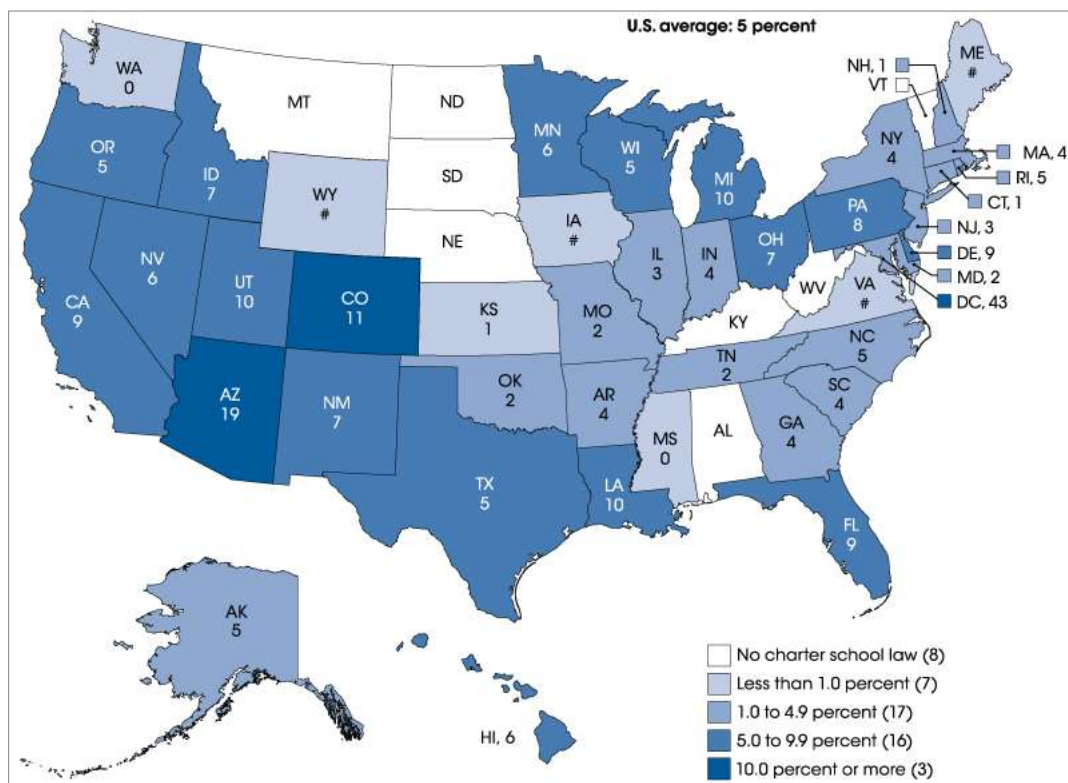

Figure 2: United States Percentages of all Public School Students Enrolled in Charter Schools SY2014
(Source: National Center for Education Statistics Commissioner, 2017) (Note: Louisiana and Michigan % are inaccurately categorized)

The legislation adopted by Arizona for managing the state's public charter school system has been ranked favorably by the Center for Education Reform (CER). Nationally, charter school legislation varies from state to state and the CER has been comparatively analyzing these differences since 1997 (Zgainer & Kerwin,, 2015). The mission of the Center for Education Reform is to "expand educational opportunities that lead to improved economic outcomes for all Americans, particularly our youth, ensuring that the conditions are ripe for innovation, freedom and flexibility throughout U.S. education" (Center for Education Reform, 2017). The CER's research has been an integral part of a national understanding of legislative differences in charter law between states. The United States Department of Education recognizes the significance of the CER's research as they direct inquiries concerning charter law from their own website to the CER's website.

Within the legislation for Arizona charter schools, "a charter school is exempt from all statutes and rules relating to schools, governing boards and school districts, except as provided in the state's charter school law and in a charter school's charter" (Education Commission of the States, 2016). The Center for Education Reform has created an index called the "Educational Opportunity Index" that annually ranks each state's charter legislation with a scorecard. Arizona has been highly ranked as an "A" state in the CER's annual report for the last three years (Zgainer & Kerwin, 2015). Within the Educational Opportunity Index, a high grade reflects lower accountability to public authorities" and "laws that encourage charter school development". The CER's 2015 report identified that one reason Arizona scored an "A" grade was because Arizona legislation permits the charter holders to receive "exemptions from school district rules" and receive "a blanket waiver from most rules and regulations governing traditional public schools” (Zgainer & Kerwin, 2015). These allowances fall within the legislative space of “operational and fiscal autonomy” (Zgainer & Kerwin, 2015:4). Arizona’s guidelines for charter school accountability from the Arizona Department of Education are shown in Table 2.

Table 2: Accountability Law for Arizona Charter Schools

“Accountability in Arizona Charter Schools

Academic Accountability:

- 1) Must demonstrate alignment to Arizona’s Academic Standards.
- 2) Must participate in state-mandated annual nationally norm-referenced testing program.
- 3) Must participate in the Arizona criterion-referenced testing program, Arizona Instrument to Measure Standards (AIMS) in grades 3 through 8 and 10.
- 4) Must state clear performance objectives, including percentage of mastery and provide curriculum samples with a clear crosswalk between the curriculum and the Arizona Academic Standards in their charter application before a charter can be granted.
- 5) Subject to sanctions for non-compliance.

Financial Accountability:

- 1) Must adhere to State statutes for submission of an annual budget.
- 2) Every charter school must submit a detailed business plan as part of their charter application.
- 3) Must conduct an annual external audit (both programmatic and financial) with an independent certified CPA.
- 4) Must annually demonstrate compliance with the uniform system of financial records for charter schools (USFRCS) or must demonstrate compliance with Generally Accepted Accounting Principles (GAAP) if they have received an allowed exception from USFRCS.
- 5) Must submit annual financial reports to the Superintendent of Public Instruction regarding funding by program for inclusion in the Superintendent’s Annual Report.

General Accountability:

- 1) All charter schools must comply with all state, local, and federal laws regarding health, safety, and civil rights. This includes, but is not limited to, compliance with city and county ordinances in relation to the safety, quality, and location of their facilities.
- 2) All charter schools must have their current Certificate of Occupancy with an E-1 rating and the current Fire Marshall’s Permit on file with sponsor.
- 3) All charter schools must comply with all provisions of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) as well as comply with any restrictions or regulations related to acceptance of federal funding for start-up or programmatic functions.
- 4) Each charter school must submit annual demographic and ethnicity data for the Superintendent of Public Instruction’s Annual Report, as well as periodic enrollment counts throughout the year by which their apportionments are adjusted.
- 5) Each charter school is required to keep a public file of education qualifications and work experiences of all current and former teaching staff available for any parent to view.
- 6) Each charter school is required to have a five-year contract compliance review by their sponsoring entity.
- 7) Each charter school must submit annual school profile data by school site for Arizona School Report Cards.
- 8) Charter school teaching staff and/or volunteers who work with students must have a fingerprint clearance card issued through the Arizona Department of Public Safety for tracking purposes.
- 9) All charter school staff must be background checked upon employment.”

(Source: Arizona Department of Education, 2011)

The accountability guidelines in Table 2 only apply to an individual charter school where the term “charter school” is used. Otherwise, it refers to the charter holder. (Arizona Department of Education also refers to the charter holder as a “charter district”). There are three different sections within the guidelines of accountability. For the first section, academic accountability, each charter school is accountable for reporting test scores to the state. In the second section, financial accountability, the reported information is aggregated to the charter holder and not the individual school. While this is also the case for traditional school districts, traditional school districts are defined by physical boundaries. Charter holders can operate multiple schools in multiple locations, creating a barrier to understanding how their financial information is connected to the location of their schools.

Current reporting requirements for Arizona school districts allow the state (and federal) government to monitor enrollment and funding activity to the location of the school district using the national School Attendance Boundary Survey (National Center for Education Statistics Staff, 2015). For clearer understanding of these school district locations, the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) developed a framework for regions of different population densities and distances from urban zones (Geverdt, 2015) (Appendix A). The NCES has identified four major population zones (City, Suburban, Town, and Rural) that have three different subtypes within each locale type. The framework “relies on standard urban and rural definitions developed by the U.S. Census Bureau, and each type of locale is either urban or rural in its entirety”, but it can also be broken down into 12 specific categories (Geverdt, 2015) (Appendix A).

Through identifying school districts with their locale classifications, the State of Arizona and the federal government are able to group school districts of similar locale together for comparative analysis (Davenport, 2016: Appendix C). Some of the conclusions drawn from school districts’ annual reported information (combined with their locale classification) include recommendations for best practices in different aspects of efficiency and spending (Davenport, 2016: Appendix C). However, a locale classification to a school district is “derived from the locale codes of the schools in the district.” This means, “if 50-percent or more of the public school students attend schools with the same locale code, that locale code is assigned to the district” (Geverdt, 2015).

The current national approach (also used for statistical analysis at the state level) outlined by the Department of Education does not use the entire area of the school district as a factor in classification. While this might help make distinctions in metropolitan areas, an alternative approach could be more appropriate for Arizona due to vast areas of rural land and the economies tied to these areas. Casa Grande Union High School District (CGUHSD) serves as an example for why an alternative classification process should be considered. For the 2015 audit of school district spending, Casa Grande Union High School District’s location was classified as “suburb” (Davenport, 2016: 86). Even with a majority of the district’s total area comprised of a rural classification (Figure 4), the classification of “suburb” places Casa Grande in the same category as school districts such as Chandler Unified and Gilbert Unified School Districts. Districts within the same category are used in comparative analysis for understanding best spending practices both at a state and federal level (Davenport, 2016). If there is a possibility that this classification policy is limiting spatial analysis of state funding, then an alternative should be considered.

CHAPTER 2: The Geospatial Data Challenge

2.1 Mixed Information: Different Agencies, Different Location Data

In the State of Arizona, aggregating financial data to the charter holder creates a situation unique from traditional school districts. In all states, traditional school districts are required to submit updated boundaries to the state departments of education every two years as a part of the No Child Left Behind Act (National Center for Education Statistics Staff, 2015). This allows school district statistics to be spatially related to the district locations and analyzed. The National Center for Education Statistics (NCES) produces GIS shapefiles with updated school boundaries for public use. These shapefiles identify every school district in the nation with both a geographical identification number (GEOID) and a school district identification number (LEA) that identifies school district type by elementary, high school, or unified.

From having identifiers for each school district location (GEOIDs and LEAs) available for public use, corresponding school district data can be spatially analyzed in a variety of ways, including relationships to Census Bureau statistics. Charter school districts can only be spatially referenced when there is one charter district operating one charter school. Otherwise, the charter district cannot be mapped due to the practice of charter districts operating multiple charter schools in a variety of locations. For the 2016-2017 school year, there were 426 charter districts operating 547 charter schools (confirmed with the Arizona State Board of Charter Schools). It should be noted that 425 out of 426 of these charter holders have been authorized by the Arizona State Board of Charter Schools and the remaining authorizer is Arizona State University, authorizing charters for ASU. For this study, all charter schools not operating as online charter schools (total=528) were geocoded by the addresses listed with the Arizona State Board of Charter Schools. The practice of aggregating financial information to the charter holder has created a barrier from understanding financial relationships to location.

As seen in Table 3, the state of Arizona reports charter holder information (Type = Other Education Agency) in the same dataset as school district information (Type = Regular School District). This table uses a selection of schools from Pinal County as an example for differences that can be seen within one largely rural county. In the table, the number of schools operated by each charter holder and each school district are identified. The greatest difference for the level of accountability in this data is the address listed for a charter holder's office. This address references the company (charter holder) location and this can be in Arizona or another state. Charter districts with offices outside of Pinal County have been highlighted (Table 3). The public information available in this dataset gives the National Center for Educational Statistics District ID and State District IDs (as well as number of schools each operates) and identifies the county where each district operates. Other than the name of the county, the location of all charter district schools is unknown. The selection from Pinal County was used as an example because of the variety of charter holder locations listed outside of the county. The locale classifications are relative to the site of the school and not the location of the charter holder office. An example of this is "Imagine Coolidge Elementary, Inc." that has an address in Phoenix, but a locale of rural-fringe which would make sense for a school in Coolidge and not a school in Phoenix. This table illustrates the communication of limited location information from charter schools to a national level. It does not offer specific locations of schools where there are multiple charters operated from one holder. It also does not offer a specific school location for one charter holder operating one school when the charter holder office is not even in the same county as the charter school.

(Selection from Appendix E)(Source: National Center for Education Statistics Staff, 2016)

The data above in Table 3 (Appendix E) shows the location information from charter school districts sent to the U.S. Department of Education from Arizona. There is additional information sent for each school within each charter district, but the location is attached to the charter district. This is the same for traditional school districts. However, they also have a requirement of submitting updated school boundaries every two years (National Center for Education Statistics Staff, 2015). At the state level, the location of each charter school is managed by the authorizing agency. In Arizona, the Arizona State Board for Charter Schools (ASBCS) is the authorizing agency for 99-percent of all charter schools. Both the ASBCS and the Arizona Department of Education use a map development application created by the Arizona Charter Schools Association called “Education Evaluator” (Arizona Charter Schools Association, 2015). So, other than the three charters managed by Arizona State University, there are two state agencies managing all of the charter schools in the state and these two agencies are using the Arizona Charter Schools Association for location references for these schools.

The Education Evaluator will generate a map and a list of schools. However, it is not in a shapefile or table form. Gathering location data for schools is a slow process through this method as the number of school addresses to view is limited. For a fee of $1200, the Arizona Charter Schools Association offers a Gold membership to vendors in the “charter marketplace” of their website that includes a detailed list of charter school information. But free to the public, there is another method. Addresses can also be accessed through the “School Search” (Arizona Department of Education, 2017) on the Arizona Department of Education’s website. The search is not friendly and works best by searching per county. Then, school addresses can be copied and pasted into a spreadsheet and then cleaned up for accuracy to be geocoded. The list of charter schools can be verified with available files for the list of October enrollment figures from ADE’s research and evaluation team (ADE Research & Evaluation Division, 2016). This way, schools can be confirmed if they are still operational (having attendance implies this).

After a table of charter schools with addresses is made, there are important identifiers that must be added to each school in order to append (or join) data later. These identifiers (Table 4) can be found on different sheets within the enrollment figures excel files (ADE Research & Evaluation Division, 2016).

The above table lists the available data reported for individual charter schools. In addition to these, there are also "report cards" for individual schools that can be found through the Arizona State Board for Charter Schools. In order to spatially analyze the charter schools with other geographic information on education after a shapefile has been created, there are other valuable national resources that can offer additional data. The Digest of Education Statistics from the National Center for Education Statistics (NCES Digest of Education Statistics, 2017) offers a variety of additional data related to national education. Additionally, the National Center for Education Statistics has created a selection of story maps (NCES MapED, 2017) for the following data sets (which all have accessible, public shapefiles):

- School Attendance Boundary Survey
- NCES Locales
- American Community Survey and District Special Tabulations
- Common Core of Data
- Integrated Postsecondary Education Data System
- National Assessment of Educational Progress
- Private School Universe Survey

It is worth noting that there is a national dataset (point shapefiles) for private schools called the “Private School Universe Survey” and there is not any spatial information for charter schools.

2.2 Geocoding: Creating a Shapefile for Arizona Charter Schools

Available data for individual charter schools has included “school reports” from the school search on the Arizona State Board of Charter Schools website (Arizona Department of Education, 2017) and “enrollment figures” from the Arizona Department of Education’s Research & Evaluation Division (ADE Research & Evaluation Division, 2016). Between both of these resources, this study has been able to use the number of charter schools and the number of students enrolled in Arizona from 2011 to 2015. Additionally, the addresses of all charter schools (total = 547) were confirmed with the Arizona State Board of Charter Schools. Online charter schools (total = 19) were separated from the total and the remaining brick and mortar charter schools (total = 528) were geocoded.

Dr. David Garcia, professor at Arizona State University’s Mary Lou Fulton Teachers College, clarified the issues of researching charter schools with GIS by noting that these studies are “predicated on the assumption that charter schools enroll their students from ‘nearby’ neighborhood schools. To the extent that students choose to attend charter schools that are located far from their neighborhood schools, district boundary and geographic mapping create less accurate comparison groups” (Garcia, 2008: 810). This practicum has been approached with the understanding that not all charter schools will be attracting students from the districts in which they are located. According to the Arizona State Board of Charter Schools “School Search”, there were 18 charter schools operating as online charter schools for the 2014-2015 school year (Table 5). These online schools can be attended by any student residing anywhere in the state of Arizona.

The location of the students attending these schools could be anywhere in the state and there is research needed to understand this growing section of the charter school population.

In ArcGIS, the “USA Local Composite” address locator worked to create a point shapefile for all schools. Addresses for each school were obtained from the Arizona State Board of Charter Schools (the complete list created is shown in Appendix F). This state agency has operated as the authorizing agency for all but the three charter schools which are authorized by Arizona State University. A table of reported enrollment counts for all schools for the 2011-12 to 2014-15 school years (ADE Research & Evaluation Division, 2016) was created and joined to the charter schools point shapefile based upon Arizona's school entity IDs. Figure 3 identifies all on-site charter schools and the variance of 2014-15 attendance counts across Arizona. Figure 3 also shows the locale of urban and rural areas within Arizona.

CHAPTER 3: A Geospatial Analysis Example

3.1 Review of GIS Research on Charter Schools

Even without geographic locations for charter school districts, there has been a variety of research conducted on the data that is reported per charter school, rather than per charter district. Most published research has approached this situation by trying to understand charter school student populations, focusing on student ethnicities and poverty-levels. As these studies are dependent upon the data that charter holders have been required to report (academic standing for state testing, demographics, free-lunch status), inductive reasoning has been an effective approach. The literature that has been reviewed for this practicum has included studies where GIS has been used for analyzing features of recent charter school developments. However, a lack of research exists regarding charter schools in rural communities.

With reported demographic data from Arizona charter schools, Cobb and Glass (1999) were able to utilize GIS to study patterns of racial segregation. They found that by grouping charter schools and district schools, charter schools have shown a 20% higher enrollment of white students than the nearby district schools (Garcia, 2008: 810). Another study titled “Race, Wealth, and Charter Schools” (Clark, 2010) published by The American Political Science Association, demonstrated the effective use of GIS in understanding social trends in California charter schools. This study created a ranking system for charter school mission statements and paired it against different demographic data through multiple regression analysis. The study was conducted as an effort to find ways to “close the achievement gap” as it identified how “certain charter school programs correlate with specific racial and socioeconomic categories” (Clark, 2010: 1).

GIS has also been used in New York City to examine the location of new charter schools. In the New York City study, researchers tried to identify similarities between the location of new charter schools with Census and school district data. Results of the study “suggest that charters are responding to poor student achievement and possibly to poverty density, but not to parental satisfaction” (Saultz, Fitzpatrick & Jacobsen, 2015: 446). A portion of this study examines the density of poverty, assuming an urban density of population. One objective of the study was to determine if new schools were being built in high-demand locations. As the researchers pointed out, economic theory would have suggested that new school locations would be driven by parent satisfaction. However, they found areas of low school performance as the greatest factor in charter school location. (Saultz, Fitzpatrick & Jacobsen, 2015: 461)

3.2 Spatial Analysis Methodology

The first step in the methodology of this research was to create the alternative location classification for each school district in Arizona. This was done by using the national NCES locale shapefile and clipping it to the boundaries of Arizona. The NCES locales can be fully collapsed into a basic urban–rural dichotomy, or expanded into a more detailed collection of 12 distinct categories” (Geverdt, 2015: 2)(Appendix A). For the scope of this research, the three classifications of rural fringed, distant, and remote (see Appendix A for definitions) were combined to create one rural classification. This was done by taking the original locale shapefile and dissolving it by the locale attributes, then dissolving the three records (41, 42, and 43) into one rural polygon to cover the entire state.

From that point, the “identity” tool was used in the Spatial Analysis extension of ArcGIS. The combined rural areas shapefile was used as the “identity” feature and the school district shapefile (218 records) derived from the Census Bureau's 2015 TIGER/Line database was used as the input feature (U.S. Census Bureau, 2015). This created an output of 241 records because multiple polygons were created for some non-contiguous districts. By dissolving the 241 records by GEOID, the output was 202 school districts. This meant there were 202 school districts containing any amount of rural area. In order to find the percentage of rural land within each school district, the school district polygons were then clipped by the rural polygon comprised of all three rural classifications. This gave a new amount of area for each GEOID. Comparing the new area to the old area gave the final percentage of rural area for each school district. By performing this spatial analysis to identify the percentage of rural land within each traditional school district, a relationship between a charter school location and the school district was enabled for further analysis.

(Source: Author)

After each school district was identified with a percentage of rural area, each charter school was then identified with the corresponding percentage relative to its location. The information from this spatial join was then exported to a table and a scatterplot of rural percentages and student enrollment was created (Figure 7).

In Figure 7, the x-axis is the total attendance reported for each charter school for the year 2014. The y-axis is the percentage of rural land identified for each school district. There is visible clustering of charter schools of similar attendance at the lowest and greatest rural percentages. Since this could be indicative of differences in changes for enrollment between urban and rural traditional school districts, the enrollment changes for these groups were studied separately. This was approached by calculating the enrollment changes (percent change) from SY 2012 to SY 2015. A histogram was made for the 30 most rural traditional school districts (Figure 8) and for the 30 least rural school districts (Figure 9).

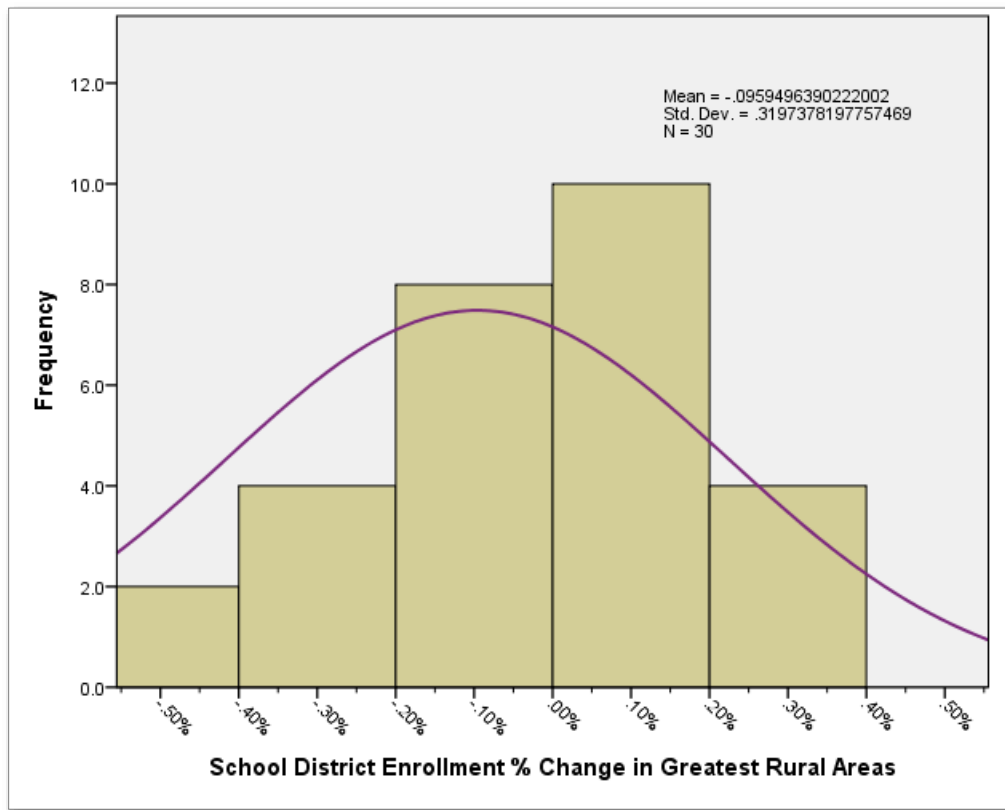

Figure 8: Frequency Histogram of Enrollment % Change in the 30 Most Rural Areas

(Source: Author)

As seen in Figure 8, the 30 most rural traditional school districts had an average enrollment loss of 9% (mean = $-.0959$) (standard deviation = $.3197$) over a three year span from the 2011-2012 to 2014-2015 school years. The frequency histogram for the 30 least rural school districts (Figure 9) did not show a significant change in enrollment over the same three school years (mean = $.0032$) (standard deviation = $.0599$).

3.3 Spatial Analysis Results

To clarify what a 9% loss of enrollment could do to a rural school district, the percentages of all revenue sources for school districts (local, intermediate, state, and federal) were examined. Using the reported revenue for all traditional school districts for the 2014-15 year, revenues collected from each of the four sources were divided by the total amount of revenue to find the percentage for each source. Taking the current 218 school districts and eliminating the school districts without reported enrollment or revenue for the 2014-15 school year, there were 204 school districts remaining for review. Table 6 shows the result of the Spearman's Rank correlation between the percentage of rural area and the percentage of state revenue relied upon by each school district. With a correlation significant at the .01 level, a somewhat negative relationship is shown to exist between these two variables. This suggests that school districts with a greater percentage of rural land are relying on a greater percentage of revenue from the state.

By observing a decline of enrollment in rural school districts, lawmakers in rural areas have reason to be “particularly wary” (Huetteman & Alcindor, 2017) of the initiatives towards more “school choice” at national and state levels. The “Joint Legislative Budget Committee Report” issued in July 2016 (Table 1) has listed the revenue collected by school districts and charter school holders per pupil. Due to the state practice of paying out to schools on a per pupil basis, schools losing attendance will be forced to make budget changes. The school districts which have shown to be most vulnerable to a decrease in enrollment over a three year span are also the districts that have a greater reliance on state revenue. This implies that a majority of rural school districts are in a disadvantaged position because losing attendance translates to losing state revenue. The need for additional state assistance to many school districts has been a hot topic since the districts sued the state and lost in 1994. “Currently, school districts are getting about 15 percent of what they were initially told they would get each year in what's called District Additional Assistance” (Rau, 2017). At the same time, “charter schools are receiving about 85 percent in Charter Additional Assistance” (Rau, 2017).

Without having a thorough study of what has transpired in rural areas since the introduction of charter schools, or the ability to research charter school financials separate from the charter holder, expanding the umbrella of “school choice” in rural areas should be approached cautiously. Traditional school districts relying on state revenue for a majority of their total revenue are considered vulnerable if they are also highly rural (Table 6). Fifty-nine school districts fitting these criteria have been identified and mapped (Figure 10).

CHAPTER 4: Future Directions: Towards Arizona Charter School Data Transparency

In Arizona, “a charter school is exempt from all statutes and rules relating to schools, governing boards and school districts, except as provided in the state's charter school law and in a charter school's charter. Charter schools are subject to academic accountability, financial and electronic data submission, and health and safety requirements” (Education Commission of the States, 2016).

Charter schools do not report locations of individual schools and they do not report financial information for individual schools. The practice of not reporting financial information from separate charter school locations causes the state to submit vague data that does not represent actual school locations to the federal government (Table 3).

The accepted practice of aggregating all financial data for charter schools to the charter holder results in a lack of location specific financial data due to multiple charter schools in a variety of locations being managed by a single charter holder. Studying what is reported per charter school (enrollment and demographics) revealed a similar count of charter students attending in both urban and rural areas of Arizona (Figure 7). Understanding that many rural school districts rely on more than 40 percent of their revenue from the state, the school districts most vulnerable to increases in charter school enrollment who fit this criteria have been identified (Figure 10).

While special attention has been given to studying specific needs of public school students in rural areas for decades (Geverdt, July 2015), more research is now needed to understand the effects “school choice” could have in rural areas. For instance, transportation in rural school districts is a larger part of the budget than in more urban districts (Davenport, 2016). Casa Grande Union High School District, shown as largely rural in Figure 4, allocated 10% of their budget to transportation in 2015 while other “peer” school districts in Chandler and Gilbert allocated around 4% of their spending to transportation (Davenport, 2016). Noticeably, there is a 6% difference directly reflected in the classroom spending, or teacher’s salaries, where Casa Grande Union High School District spends 6% less than the state average in the classroom (Davenport, 2016). In cases where charter schools do not provide transportation and the public school district does, will this divide students between the schools based upon students’ resources, as students without transportation might have difficulty attending the charter. The following is a detailed explanation from the U.S. Department of Education about the reasons geographic information is used in public education:

“In the same way that administrative, fiscal, demographic, and sample survey data provide valuable information about high school drop-outs, per pupil expenditures, neighborhood poverty, and student achievement, geographic data like school district boundaries, school locations, and community locale classifications help to clarify the social and spatial context that affects schools and school systems. NCES develops geographic data to provide information about the spatial conditions of education in the U.S., but geographic data are also fundamental for developing other types of demographic and administrative data. For example, the Census Bureau could not create Title I poverty estimates or school district estimates from the American Community Survey (ACS) without first defining the extent of school district boundaries. Surveys like the National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) and the Schools and Staffing Survey (SASS) use school locale information to help design samples that accurately represent educational conditions in all types of geographic areas. Programs like E-Rate and the Rural Education Achievement Program use information about school location to help determine program funding and eligibility. Educational geography not only provides a direct source of data for examining the spatial conditions of schools and school districts, it also provides the necessary structure for developing other types of educational data” (EDGE Staff, 2017).

“School choice” could be researched for greater understanding if there were higher standards of accountability, namely standards that would require individual charter schools to report data separately, and therefore, examined spatially. Spatial analysis of charter school data could go much further than the example provided in the present study of Arizona, such as studying if similar relationships exist between urban and rural charter school finances. However, this information is aggregated to charter holders which can operate multiple schools in multiple locations. Online charter schools further complicate this understanding. While online charters are also operated by charter holders that aggregate financial information, they have a virtual non-location, and are experiencing increasing attendance. Increasing accountability for reporting online charter schools by locational impacts would be difficult, unless the online charters schools would provide data of where their online students lived. Location aside, it would still make sense for online charters to also report financials, such as funding and spending, separately when there are multiple schools.

Additional transparency for charter schools could be achieved by having a national database of charter school locations. This would be similar to the geodatabase already managed by the National Center for Education Statistics for private school data, called the Private School Universe Survey. According to NCES, “the Private School Survey produces data similar to that of the NCES Common Core of Data (CCD) for the public schools. The data are useful for a variety of policy- and research-relevant issues” (NCES MapED, 2017). As a part of this practicum, a geodatabase for Arizona charter schools has been created with the intention of becoming a public resource. By updating the charter school data every October with new enrollment numbers per school, transitions and patterns in charter school development can be further examined.

The question of whether or not all schools should be held to the same transparency standards regarding accountability has taken national center stage with the new Secretary of Education, Betsy DeVos. Because she has been an outspoken proponent of expanding “school choice”, Senator Tim Kaine (D-VA) had specific questions prepared for her cabinet confirmation hearing on January 17, 2017:

Kaine: “If confirmed will you insist upon equal accountability in any K-12 school or educational program that receives taxpayer funding whether public, public charter or private?”

DeVos: “I support accountability.”

Kaine: “Equal accountability?”

DeVos: “I support accountability.”

Kaine: “Is that a yes or a no?”

DeVos: “I support accountability.”

Kaine: “Do you not want to answer my question?”

DeVos: “I support accountability.”

Kaine: “Let me ask you this. I think all schools that receive taxpayer funding should be equally accountable. Do you agree?”

DeVos: “Well they don’t, they are not today.”

Kaine: “Well, I think they should. Do you agree with me?”

DeVos: “Well no . . . ”

Kaine, interrupting her, said: “You don’t agree with me.” And he moved on to another topic.” (Boyer, 2017)

If the $20 billion voucher initiative promoted by the Republican presidential campaign platform is “aimed at low-income children” (Huetteman & Alcindor, 2017), then there is an implication that it would be targeting not only students in low-income urban areas, but also students in low-income rural areas. From the research in this study, there is data to suggest that additional “school choices” to traditional rural school districts will have a negative impact on the revenue that these school districts are expecting. The revenue they need to operate within their current budgets relies on state-funding, which relies on attendance. As Arizona expands “school choice” laws (Appendix B), the research from this practicum suggests that state regulations for financial accountability should be increased in order for more calculated decision-making to be available for lawmakers.

Appendix A: NCES Locale Framework

(Source: Geverdt 2015: 2)

Classifications and Criteria

"The NCES locale framework is composed of four basic types (City, Suburban, Town, and Rural) that each contains three subtypes. It relies on standard urban and rural definitions developed by the U.S. Census Bureau, and each type of locale is either urban or rural in its entirety. The NCES locales can be fully collapsed into a basic urban–rural dichotomy, or expanded into a more detailed collection of 12 distinct categories. These subtypes are differentiated by size (in the case of City and Suburban 2 assignments) and proximity (in the case of Town and Rural assignments). The NCES classifications and corresponding two-digit locale codes are as follows:

City – Large (11): Territory inside an Urbanized Area and inside a Principal City with population of 250,000 or more.

City – Midsize (12): Territory inside an Urbanized Area and inside a Principal City with population less than 250,000 and greater than or equal to 100,000.

City – Small (13): Territory inside an Urbanized Area and inside a Principal City with population less than 100,000.

Suburban – Large (21): Territory outside a Principal City and inside an Urbanized Area with population of 250,000 or more.

Suburban – Midsize (22): Territory outside a Principal City and inside an Urbanized Area with population less than 250,000 and greater than or equal to 100,000.

Suburban – Small (23): Territory outside a Principal City and inside an Urbanized Area with population less than 100,000.

Town – Fringe (31): Territory inside an Urban Cluster that is less than or equal to 10 miles from an Urbanized Area.

Town – Distant (32): Territory inside an Urban Cluster that is more than 10 miles and less than or equal to 35 miles from an Urbanized Area.

Town – Remote (33): Territory inside an Urban Cluster that is more than 35 miles from an Urbanized Area.

Rural – Fringe (41): Census-defined rural territory that is less than or equal to 5 miles from an Urbanized Area, as well as rural territory that is less than or equal to 2.5 miles from an Urban Cluster.

Rural – Distant (42): Census-defined rural territory that is more than 5 miles but less than or equal to 25 miles from an Urbanized Area, as well as rural territory that is more than 2.5 miles but less than or equal to 10 miles from an Urban Cluster.

Rural – Remote (43): Census-defined rural territory that is more than 25 miles from an Urbanized Area and also more than 10 miles from an Urban Cluster."

Notes:

1. Includes only funding provided through the Basic State Aid funding formula, including local property taxes, trust land earnings, and Proposition 301 additional school day funding.
2. Funding data are from Arizona Department of Education (ADE) Basic State Aid payment records as of June 5, 2016. ADM data are from the ADE Annual Report for FY 2015 (Volume II, pages I-260 and II-422).
3. Data for district sponsored charter schools are included in school district totals. Approximately 39,300 ADM pupils attended district sponsored charter schools in FY 2015.
4. Per pupil amounts have been computed by dividing funding totals by corresponding ADM counts and, therefore, represent statewide averages.
5. Charter schools do not receive separately delineated transportation funding
