N.A.U. FORESTRY STUDENT
in his natural habitat

Study area: Flagstaff, Arizona
Study period: 1974-1972

* this study commissioned by the Institute
For The Incurably Curious

With Special Thanks to:

Mr. Tim O'Keefe

who, in spite of the time required to work on his Ph. d., still found the time to be Forestry Club advisor this year, and was always ready to help out where needed.

First.....

a message from the Dean

"Forestry education is not without problems these days, one of the greatest of which may be over-subscription. NAV like other schools, is experiencing increases in forestry enrollment at just the time the employment is worsening!

The matter of too many foresters is one of our prime concerns just now. As a faculty, we're deep into discussion of what to do, how to hold down or decrease enrollment, what method to use and be fair to all concerned. We'd appreciate comments from you alums on this problem. Should we be concerned? Should we worry about placement of graduates?

The first year of the new integrated curriculum has brought problems, but it has also further convinced us of the desirability of such an undergraduate program. We hope you'll stop by and sit in on a session of the new system.

Continue to keep in touch and come see us!"

Georgia-Pacific helps keep America's symbol of freedom flying high.

You, too, can protect eagles.

The magnificent American Bald Eagles are in danger. Eagle populations are declining. Bird experts blame the eagles' problems on loss of nesting sites due to encroachment by civilization such as construction of towns, cities, highways, roads and airports; possible chemical-caused infertility; and above all, illegal shooting. It is a Federal crime to shoot or molest eagles, yet people continue to shoot them.

Found only on the North American continent, bald eagles have a wing span of 6½ to 8 feet. They don't get snowy white heads and tails until the fourth year, so they look like hawks, which also are protected in most states. Eagles are among the most magnificent and majestic birds in the world.

G-P foresters protect eagles

Georgia-Pacific manages a successful eagle protection program on our millions of acres of timberlands from Maine to Oregon, from Florida to Washington, from Arkansas to Alaska. Our foresters locate eagle nest trees and protect them. We keep roads and people from the nests wherever possible. Our logging crews do not harvest eagle nest trees, and we leave adjacent timber surrounding them. And, to stop illegal shooting, we offer free posters to help people identify eagles.

Send for your free eagle posters

You can help by teaching others to appreciate, identify and protect eagles. Free posters are available in two sizes, 8 x 10" and 10 x 17" for landowners, tree farmers, ranchers, conservationists, bird watchers, school teachers and students.

Arizona's forests have a lot to give — go see for yourself. There's something for everyone. It's a bag of fun for weekend picnickers, campers, fishermen, hunters.

An evergreen spectacular, complete with highways, trails and lakes that lure tourists and vacationers from all over the nation. A giant feedlot for wildlife, cattle and sheep. A 200-mile long commercial workshop for lumbermen and papermakers. Mighty important, too, in the support of communities through taxes paid by forest products companies.

Over the years, National Forests have become All-American institutions, carefully administered in a multiple-use manner by the U.S. Forest Service — for the greatest good, for the greatest number of people.

Because of sustained-yield conservation practices, Arizona's forest land will continue to renew itself and serve everyone for centuries to come.

And because of wisdom and understanding cultivated through education, you, like the tree, will continue to grow and serve mankind for years to come.

Go. Learn. Enjoy your forests. It's the natural thing to do.
